Bottles.

Bottles were among the first known inventions of the human race. The necessity for having some means of carrying water in long journeys over arid deserts led to the fashioning of a vessel with a small neck that could be closed, thus avoiding evaporation.

The earliest bottles were made of skins of animals and were either tied or stopped with a wooden plug. Herodotus speaks of ancient Egyptian skin bottles, and they are represented on some of the oldest of the monuments, though Pliny declares they were first known in Syria.

In the Bible the first mention of bottles of skin occurs in the ninth chapter of Joshua, fourth verse, where the wily Gibeonites took "wine bottles, old and rent and bound up," showing that they were wont, by much patching and mending, to make them last as long as possible. A little further on in the book of Judges we are told that Jael opened a bottle of milk and gave Sisera to drink. Homer, in the Iliad, mentions bottles of skin. All of which would go to show that for a long period of time this was the only material used in their construction.

If the skin receptacle did not originate in Egypt, it is now generally conceded that it was there bottles were first made of glass, which has since become the universal material in their construction. The Egyptians, also made bottles of stone, alabaster, ivory, bone, porcelain, bronze, silver, and gold; but the mass of the people generally used glazed pottery or common earthenware. They fashioned these various materials into graceful and fantastic shapes, often with very beautiful ornamentation.

As early as the reign of Thothmes III, 1490 B. C., elegantly shaped bottles and vases were made, and the first use of glass for this purpose is supposed to be as far back as the eighteenth dynasty. In Egypt originated the art of cutting glass; and on the ancient monuments are to be seen representations of cut-glass bottles. For some time all bottles of glass were small; probably because the makers had not yet learned how to handle large masses of the molten material. Some of these glass bottles were rough on the inside, with occasional grains of sand adhering to the surface, which may have been caused by filling the vessel with sand as a means of cooling the glass, a process used before blowing had reached the perfection it did later on. The earliest glass bottles were mostly flattened in shape, the round bottle arriving with more inventive ideas in machinery.

Manufacturing of bottles, from the most elaborately engraved or cut crystal to the common article of commerce, has become an enormous industry amounting annually to many millions. Dark green and brown glass cost the least to manufacture, as certain ingredients which enter into the making of the clear, white glass can be replaced by much cheaper chemicals. Certain colors in glass also cost more than others to produce, a pure ruby red being about the most expensive of all.—Harper's Weekly.

California Within Her Rights.

The California-Japan situation while difficult, is not complex. Under the Californian law, no Japanese immigrant can become a citizen, though this prohibition does not extend to the native-born. The Legislature now proposes to pass a law ordaining that no alien can become a landholder.

Now the Constitution of the United States provides that "the Constitution and the laws of the United States, which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land, and the Judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

Under this provision, if any law of California were in contravention of the Japanese treaty it would be, by the very fact, null and void. But the right to hold land in the several States of this Union has never, so far as we recollect, been the subject of treaty with a foreign Power, nor do we see how it could well become so.

In short: California appears to be well within her rights in the proposed legislation. It comes under the head of things lawful but not expedient. Secretary Bryan's mission is to persuade the Golden State not to do, in the interest of neighborliness and peace, what she has an undoubted right to do if she so elects—St. Louis Republic.

The Wine of the Country.

Mr. James Bryce is a teetotaler, we believe: Mr. Bryan's wineless and uncondemned dinner to him and Mrs. Bryce may therefore have received superfluous compliment from the Drys and superfluous criticism from the Wets.

It may not be superfluous to say, however, that the members of the Diplomatic Corps in any country are entitled to be entertained according to the customs of the country in which they are serving.

How many people in this country drink wine at dinner?

We remember hearing an astute Provencal, who was about to settle in this country for business purposes a number of years, say, and even amid the temptations of the old Delmonicos "No! In Rome do as the Romans do, I shall accustom myself to ice water."

On broader philosophical grounds and apart from individual practices in regard to the use of alcohol, it might be said that, whether you are Secretary of State or plain John Doe, you should not force your guest to drink grape juice or plain or bottled water. Give him these and wines, and let his dinner course be elective not required. But if a host has conscientious scruples against the "wine cup," why should he violate them because he is an official host?

No doubt the Wet diplomats whom Mr. Bryan entertained found his entertainment piquant. Some of them may have sat at the tables of English political magnates as consistent. If not, he gave them a new sensation and something new to talk about; and the Metropolitan Club was open afterward.—New York Sun.

THE MAZDALAMP

is just as great an improvement over the old style carbon lamp as electric light is over a coal oil lamp—a 40 watt Mazda lamp gives 32 candle power and consumes 20 per cent less current than the old style 16 candle power carbon lamp.

Mazda lamps are not only more economical, but they give a brighter and better light.
